I think you should start young kids out spinfishing and let them enjoy that several years. It's just much easier to handle for kids, less frustrating for them.

Take them panfishing for bluegills. Bobber and worms. It is often pretty fast fishing, so they get to enjoy fishing, and it works better with their attention spans. It's lots of fun. And not just for kids.

Then get them started on flyfishing a little later. And start out with panfish.

Learning to spin fish first does not impede learning to flyfish later on, IMHO. It's no disadvantage at all.

Let kids get a little older before starting flyfishing is best, IMHO.
