Stagger,

Some rods work/feel better for certain casters. Matching the rod to the angler is what it's all about. I've seen "aggressive" (for lack of a better word) casters with a very sharp speed-up and stop and a short, quick stroke absolutely hate a full flex rod, and yet when you put a tip flex in their hands, their casting improves and they are really happy with that rod.

The same thing can be said for a caster that is not "aggressive" and has a slower casting stroke - the full flex works best. Most anglers fall somewhere in between those two extremes.

At some point, with experience, you actually can get a feel for an individual rod and adjust your casting stroke to make any rod work for you. Thus you are able to use different rods for different fishing situations.

Going with a rod that matches their natural casting style most often pleases an angler. Apparently, that rod does just that for you. Good stuff.....you're on your way! It looks like the time Heritage Ed and Foxie spent with you paid off.
