

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : From the minnow chaser thread - An ethics lesson

Re: From the minnow chaser thread - An ethics lesson

Author: : ryguyfi

Date: : 2013/1/20 13:31:09

URL:

The only way I could agree with your post would think about injuring and killing a fish. If the possibility of this happening due to fishing in a population of fish where there aren't any legal fish would thus conclude breaking the laws (due to creeling the fish) and being "unethical". I understand that much and that much only.

However do we base fishing off of keeping fish? I'd bet that a good majority of people on this board are C&R fishermen or they at least do most of the time. Is fishing for enjoyment or for fare for our tables? If it's just for enjoyment then it is all completely unethical due to the possibility of killing a fish at any point and time let alone size. Then you're breaking your own ethics of C&R no matter the legality of keeping a fish within the size restrictions allowed by the state.

I rest MY case.