I love czech/polish/euro/tightline nymph tactics. They work great.

The do not however, completely replace indicator rigs, not by a long shot.

What i've found is that by working an area with both techniques allows me to catch fish i've been passing up. For instance, I can nymph deeper parts of a run with an indicator rig, then switch to a tight line rig and effectively cover the shallower and faster water at the head of the run or the riffles leading into a run. I've found that if i get at least a few fish out of the obvious areas in a particular run, i can usually hook a few more by switching rigs and fishing the water leading into the run.
