Yeah, weather update. As a disclaimer there's still potential here and it could flip right back.

But as of now, it's looking more like the cold air is winning. Storm is getting pushed farther south. It's also weaker and drier. Verbatim right now the models are showing maybe an inch or so for southern PA, nothing for northern. But that inch or so is the very dry, powdery type, meaning it doesn't represent much moisture. With dry air, much of it could end up evaporating before even hitting the ground. And the trend is still moving farther south and weaker, so at this point it would not be too much of a surprise if we didn't see a flake.

As another update, my personal chances of attending on Saturday have went from about 50/50 to 80/20 to the good side. Travel weather looks ok, and wife is not working Saturday, she's working Sunday. No visiting families. Kid seems like he's over his recent health issues. All things pointing up.
