When the movie came out I liked that it showed the characters flyfishing which was mabe even more fringe back then.

When I watched it recently, I was more taken by the limited amount of gear the characters were using and the bamboo rods in the film which I took for Grangers due to their nickle silver reel seats and the film taking place in the West. Grangers were made in Denver Co.

For what it is worth, I think the reason why most people like books better than the movie is because a book lets our imagination fill in the gaps rather than a director cutting things down and giving us their vision of what the story should be.
