

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : New road stuff.

Re: New road stuff.

Author: : springer1

Date: : 2013/1/24 16:00:46

URL:

Here in Delaware County today, the roads are all WHITE from the brine.

Much of the runoff isn't likely to be absorbed by the surrounding fields, because in the neighborhoods and towns it goes directly into the storm sewers and directly into the creeks.

Waterways in SEPA can be a very hostile place to try and live and raise a family.

I'm no expert, but I do wonder if the problems with our fisheries are due to the sum of the pollution; chemical, biological, etc rather than just 1 silver bullet.

There's so many stress agents that the fish are simply weakened and cannot tolerate the sum total of many causes - which individually may not be an identifiable problem.

Springton dam is simply putrid and stinks in the late Summer & Fall with the algae bloom and when it all dies off and lingers as thick scum. Ther's no way there's any oxygen transfer on the surface.

30 years ago this was absolutely not the case.

Our waters are simply toxic.