A good hat and mirrored dark high-contrast fishing sun glasses are also key on the flats. It can be very frustrating if you can't see the fish. Many flats fish are silver with mirror like sides that reflect their environment so you generally only see the line of their backs or tails. You need to train your eyes to look for water pushes, tails, backs, and other disturbances on the surface. Mullet snappers and permit will sometimes follow rays as they work their way across the flats. Be ready to cast behind any rays you see. It is best to determine what direction the fish are moving and cast well ahead of them and move they fly into their path . Moving a fly towards a fish from the back or the side will often spook them. Prey species don't attack the fish hunting them.
