Sipe,

Klingys advice is really good, in fact nearly perfect. I would only reiterate that bwo's are certainly going to bring the fish up from 9-2 depending on the day. Some can be quite large, while others are small (20-24's). Ive noticed that the trout will ignore the large bwos(16-18's) and eat the little bwos. I guess they taste better??? I've had most of my dry fly success on the letort by spotting rising fish from a distance. I then try to position myself above the fish a good 30-60 feet. This involves moving slow and crawling. I've found that its easier to battle the numerous swirling flows while drifting a dry into a feeding lane from above the rising fish. I use a leader that is at least 6x and 12 feet long with two dries. Two dries causes the flies to do a switch back across the surface which will trigger strikes. Do not cast repetitively over a rising fish. Slowly retrieve your line and wait a minute. Limit your false casting, if none at all. Do this and you will catch fish within the next month on bwo's on the letort.
