Ok, ok, ok.

Sometime in the next month and a half, we need to schedule a massive brookie outing, complete with video cameras. Consider it an "in service" day to plan this thing....

My laptop needs a hotspot, doesn't work on cell phones. Online didn't work last year on mine and I doubt it will this year. Last year I printed out example maps on paper ahead of time and had written instructions on how to get to em, basically walked them through the online screens, but on paper. I just ran a massive slideshow of pictures on the computer itself, which helped lure people in. It is a pretty powerful machine in regards to media.

So it could play the video's and pictures and so forth. If you can get internet, you can go through the online stuff. We can have the paper method as a backup.
