The LL is popular, but I never thought of it as one of the top destination type places. It's popular because it's a pretty good stream in a heavily populated area. I've seen people refer to the Tully (or more accurately market it) as the "best in the east" too and I just have to laugh at that notion.

These are nice streams, but take them for what they are, nice streams. In no way do they compete with some of the others here.

For one, while the LL and Breeches have some wild fish, they do rely on stocking. Stocked streams don't often get mentioned among the best destination streams, and why should they? They are as good as the number of fish that are dumped in them. This state has plenty of wild trout water.

I put big Pine in the same category, really. On my list, it takes a BIG hit for relying on stockies. What Pine does have over some of those others is unreal hatches in a gorgeous setting.
