You are off to a great start, and Dan's advice to tie more is the best you can get. I would start focusing on proportions right away. Your hackle looks oversized to me, and it might not extend the full length of the body. But I'm no bugger expert, so take that for what it is worth. On the bead, I might poke fun at it, but not because it is orange. Orange is an interesting color that for some reason seems to work sometimes. Work on proportions on the tail because you want to tie better flies, but I wouldn't be surprised to hear that that fly works really well as is.
