HA,

I find the brookies and finding streams most attractive for me, but if no-one else steps forward, those are awfully well represented by this group and I am willing to take the entomology part. Keep accepting more help, but feel at ease that we could handle all of those topics adequately with the current talent base.

Either way, I'm in for the in-service session. I don't have a dedicated video camera. I do have an "almost SLR" advanced p&S that takes pretty good video, including good sound, image stabilization, and megazoom (up to 80x I believe). If anyone's got a tripod that would make it even better. It's the family camera, so I gotta look after it carefully, and if it's raining or snowing it's not gonna see the light of day.

My little P&S bombproof fishing camera also takes video, but it's much crappier video, scratchy sound, and probably not suitable.
