

---

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : NO!!!! Ya think?

Re: NO!!!! Ya think?

Author: : osprey

Date: : 2013/1/31 8:04:38

URL:

PCray.....I don't know where Thorndale is but from reading your posts i'm gonna assume it's in the Eastern part of Pa , where you say the availability of household natural gas is limited to around 40%. In the western part of Pa , i'm not sure but i'd bet it's more available than 40%. My thoughts are not of personal , home based filling units , but more along the line of Peoples and any of the other providers that run their engines on Natural gas also making filling stations for cars available along the route of the pipelines. It would create some employment also. The purpose of the OP was to point out the lack of common sense of some of the providers and their sudden revelation that they should switch to natural gas.