I was using the RIO UV stuff for the last 1.5 years and it's nice, but never really cures 100%. It's always a little tacky, even after leaving the flies in bright sunlight for an afternoon. It is very workable though.

I just made the switch to Clear Cure Goo and it's a world of difference. I bought the thick and liked it so much that I just ordered the thin. A big syringe of it is only like $11-12 if you shop around, which isn't too bad. You have to keep in mind you dont need to use a lot, especially on nymphs. one drop will do just fine.

As for the light, I started out with the little Loon pocket light which sucked. I remember someone posted a link on here to get a decent one for like $4 on Amazon a while back. I picked one of those up and it works just fine. You can also use those UV lights they give you in the teeth whitening kits if you have one of those lying around.
