

---

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Light Cured Adhesives

Re: Light Cured Adhesives

Author: : Crotalus

Date: : 2013/2/1 9:01:22

URL:

I have CCG, Solarez and Loon, I like them in that order.

After getting the CCG and Solarez I wont bother with the Loon so from here on I am only comparing the first two.

The thing that I dont like about the Solarez is the tubes, for me they are difficult to use and apply correctly. Additionally when I received them (from Solarez) they were poorly packed and the Thin had a big dent in it which put it under pressure and i had a "fountain" when I opened it. I do know Solarez offers their products in bottles as well, but from the webpage it appears that they are flip cap tops which I personally would make a huge mess with.

I bought the CCG thin in a bottle and the hydro in a bottle. I would like to try the syringes to see if they are more precise than the bottles.

I really really like the hydro, it is very thin and cures with no tackiness. I use it when i want to secure wraps while tying and use it as a finish over the head and eyes after the thick or thin has been used to build the head.

I use the blue CCG light but not the newest $60 light.