in my short experience as a father of 2 (I am marrying a single mother of 2) We both love to fly fish and I think that it is our favorite summertime sport, with that said both her daughter and her son have shown an interest in fly casting at least. We started by showing them in the backyard while we were practicing. They grabbed the rods and they started with just a little correction. Her son said to her this past month that he wanted to start to actually fish on the river with us as well. I am gonna keep my eye on this post for sure so I don't lose his interest. I know that the best way is to have fun. My plan is to take him for a "guys" weekend somewhere close by and hopefully get him even more interested when he sees my father and I flyfishing and I want to teach him the different cycles of the bugs life. IMHO I think teaching kids is different for all. Relax and have fun with them and most importantly I think they just want to spend time with their dad. Any other ideas would be great. I already have the both of them on the river with me some nights.
