They have native redbands (along with stockies) in the headwaters around Elko, NV. Don't know how far down they go.

My son lives in Nevada and I have found trout fishing in the desert to be a very odd and cool experience. All sorts of trout species have been isolated in little trickles. Of course stocked brookies, browns, and bows have complicated things - but native species are more respected now. Getting a Nevada native trout slam would be fun, but it's a big, big mountainous state and those streams are spread pretty far.
