As someone who scoured the entire internet for advice, and took it my first year, take gfen's post to heart. I read one of his (I believe) posts that outlined which flies you need.

Yes, you can make this sport a science, but you learn to CARE about the science with your little victories along the road. For now, you'll get disheartened if you don't experience at least a HINT of success. It took me 6 or so day-long trips to pull a trout out (which ended up being 3 inches long), but getting a few of the variables right helped keep me going. Looking back, I now know that I was trying to use too many opinions. This sport can be pretty simple if you cut it into what you've read above. After you've learned to float then you worry about stroke form
