Among fishermen, trout fishermen in particular, there seems to be an underlying sentiment that fly fishermen consider themselves elite compared to other methods of fishing. Is there a sound basis for this or is it mostly nothing more than misguided perception? Based on my own personal observations I'd tend to say it's more myth than reality.

I'm an all tackle angler, but mostly fly fish when it comes to trout. IMO, the equipment does not make the angler. However, like most stereotypes, this one is not entirely myth.

There are #censor# everywhere and some of them flyfish.
