Pcray,

I find myself in the middle ground. My family is "ultra baitfishing" if you will. They are more on the equal access side however. They don't care what your fishing with. To them fishing is fishing. They don't stereotype flyfisherman.

I have been in meetings and heard stories of the early days from meetings where the room would be packed with elitists, far greater than those i had mentioned earlier. Maybe purist is the better word. The purists would even denounce the other flyfisherman present at the meetings who would use beads or splitshot.

I think that the extremes on both ends are where the "myths" are generated.
