
Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Fly Fishing Backpack

Re: Fly Fishing Backpack

Author: : L_soult

Date: : 2013/2/8 16:52:30

URL:

Quote:

salmonoid wrote:

Quote:

L_soult wrote:

Here's my pack. I like it, but it's getting kinda old:

http://www.outdoorreview.com/cat/prod ... id/prd_80434_2957crx.aspx

Camp Trails - thats a blast from the past for me! My first pack was a Kelty external frame pack that I picked up when the Wildernest (local outdoor store) went out of business at its previous location. My next pack was a Camp Trails something or other internal frame model that I picked up off of a NetNews posting for $65 (am I dating myself with that reference to NetNews??) my first year in college. It was a horrible light blue/purple color but did the trick for a few years, until it eventually ripped out a the top of the stays. Then it was on to a Gregory, a brand that will let you comfortably haul a ton of gear, at the expense of hauling an extra 5-8 pounds of pack. And finally, I'm liking the Golite offerings, since my trips are shorter now. I'm hoping my kids get into it and I can go on some extended outings again.

I was in an ultralight kick for a while. I even made a pop-can jet stove. No time with little kids though. We go for several family camping trips in the year. I'll have to wait til they're a little older to be an overnite backpacker again. At least with FF I can go for an hour or go far a day and still have fun.