Fade - I'm gonna go against the grain here.

While a big dollar rod can certainly add to your enjoyment on your trip, being able to use it effectively is FAR more important.

I'd suggest investing in some casting lessons before you make the investment in a new rod. This isn't a knock on your casting skills - heck, I've never even met you. Refining your skills is something you should work on first, IMO, and it may lead to you being able to make a better choice regarding a rod purchase.

By all means, get the rod you want, but once you do, practice diligently to best prepare you for what may be the trip of a lifetime. Standing in the Bitterroot in July isn't the time to get things straightened out.

Be prepared.
