need it-no. but i started with a cabelas rod for under $100. decided to upgrade to a middle of the road orvis t1s. broke it a week before my annual 10 day fishing trip quite a few years later. bit the bullet and bought a winston b11x-the orvis rod would have been 4 weeks to fix. got back the orvis and used it once. love the winston. now the kids use the other 2 rods. dont know if i finally found a rod that fit my casting style or if the rod is that much better but i have never regretted spending the money for the 'high end' rod. you will have to pry the winston out of my cold dead hands to get me to give it up.
