id say wait two month and hit jersey but that's me. you could hire a guide and be tossing flies at 30 and 40 pound bass.

personally I have little experience with redfish but all around fishing slows down in winter. i looking at reds much like stripers. both have a spring and fall run, they feed on the same forage and they are willing to hit a fly. red fish just stay further south and are more adapt to shallow water and warmer water. in north Carolina they call them spotted bass. id say do some research to find prime time for them. we are all dying to get out and if you can go somewhere where its warm go for it but i think its gonna be further south to fine better fishing. Florida is where i would go if i had the money.
