I won't say one or two weren't seen, but there is no way, no way that any hatch has started. We get this kind of thing all the time and it never pans out. Hatches will get under way within two weeks of either side of when they would be expected. Trust me.

You must not have fished in early spring of last year!

I hit great quill gordon, hendrickson, and grannom hatches during the last week of march. And that was at least 3 weeks before their average emergence dates of april 15.

As for stonelfies, I saw some hatching on presidents day last year at yellow creek - which was my first day out - and was told by other fisherman that day, that they had already been hatching for several weeks
