Wait... I was under the impression that stoneflies were a western thing. Do we have stoneflies in the Eastern US?

Jeremy,

Yes, we have stoneflies in the East. It is certainly true that you hear more about them in the West as it is out there where the big "salmonfly" hatches generally occur. Folks don't fish a lot of stonefly hatches here in PA but they do occur (several varieties) and the "early" stoneflies, such as those being discussed here.....are typically the first significant annual hatches in PA. They often don't produce great fishing but rather serve as nature's notice that winter is winding down and springtime is coming.
