My fly has never left a gapping hole in the mouth of a trout. I have never hooked a trout in the belly w/ a treble hook, or in the gill with my fly-at least not enough to remember doing so. If it ever has happened, it was a rarity. This guy did it more in the span of the video than I probably did in 15+ years of fly fishing. Even if I did do it, I wouldn't stand around talking about the precious resource of wild brown trout. Sorry, I usually don't get into these things, and I generally have nothing against the hardware guys, but this was just too much. It'd be one thing if he was just another hardware guy out there doing his thing, but then to talk about carefully handling the fish, what a great resource they are, etc., come on. That's what got me.
