I could get away with my 5wt for throwing the smaller poppers and streamers, but when I do want to chuck some meat I would like a bigger rod. Getting an 8wt (possibly a 7wt) gives me the option to eventually target musky, attempt salt, and go after crap....I mean carp. Plus when I go back to MO to visit family I could throw to those farm pond largemouth.

Ideally I would own a rod from 2-10wt and they would all be equipped for various applications, but I feel that the 6wt would be to close the the 5wt for me to honestly justify at the moment.
