I tie mine a little weird, or maybe its completely normal. I don't know and don't care, frankly. I do it back to front. Tie in my tail, finish the body, and when i get to the wing. I stack my hair, take out all the fluffies on the bottom. Measure about 1 hook length and tie in the hair at that length (and at the point 2/3 up). I put some nice hard wraps holding the hair firm. For me, hair naturally goes around the shank a little (but not on the bottom). I trim the butts and throw some more wraps on. I use some dubbing to cover the butt-area of the hair then I pack as many wraps of dubbing as I can (so that it still looks normal) in front and against the wing. Somehow it turns out looking nice with the about 180 degree around the shank hair spread.
