That said, we probably had a good dozen takes, half of which resulted in hookups...not too awfully bad for a freestoner in February.

My take was a classic screw up. I had too slack a line, as I was payin attention to something related to filming instead of fishing at the time. The take surprised me, resulted in one of those super high reeling hooksets to take up the slack. But I hooked him.

Then, instead of landing it, I tried to extend the fight to allow someone to get a camera ready. Of course he got off. :(Only to find out Ed filmed it all. lol.

And I did NOT go over my waders retrieving that fly. Just goes to show, there's a reason for chesties on brooky waters. And that one is a good lesson. A fly is never lost when brookie fishing. There are only varying degrees of effort required to retrieve them.

Wish we would have had a video of volksnurse launching his staff. That was classic. And that also occurred while he was trying to retrieve my fly. See a pattern here?
