Your experience with the short strikes and follows is typical of freshly stocked fish. I am curious what species you were catching and their condition? I would suspect the rainbows were from the fall (more colorful and cleaner fins) and perhaps browns with some decent color from being held over from last spring.

There are/were decent numbers of fish left from fall stockings (all rainbows) that we fished over all winter. When the new fish come into the mix it can disrupt the fishing because the new fish don't know how to take a streamer and the resident fish seem to get lock jaw for a few weeks.

After a couple weeks the balance reestablishes itself.
