It really, really, depends on the situation.

I've only topped 100 in a day once. But I've done 70-80 in a day many, many times. These are typically on streams where on a summer day, catching 50 or more is the expectation, anything less is a poor day. That said, on the same stream at some points in the winter, 15 or so would not be looked at as a poor day.

And there are other streams and situations where you're happy just to catch a single fish, and 3 or 4 would be a good day.

Most waters fall somewhere between those extremes. But the point is that you have to measure "good" vs. "bad" days by the expectation going in, which differs wildly depending on the stream, time of year, weather conditions, water conditions, etc. It's just too broad a question to give a straightforward answer.
