I did keep a log for a while. At that time, I fished a lot more than I do now, probably 100ish outings/year rather than the 10-20 I get these days. Kids and work will do that to ya. Those outings tended to be shorter, partial day type (before or after work) deals too, whereas the 10-20 I get now are generally all-day events. I also tended to fish more limestoners for wild browns during this period, and it was very rare to rack up 70 or 80 in a day like you can fairly routinely on a good brookie stream, which I do more often now.

So how it all compares I dunno. But FWIW, during that time, I was in the vicinity of 1000 fish/year, plus or minus a few hundred. Highest numbers were spring and fall. I always remember the goal of 100 before the trout opener, which I usually made, but barely. Things would pick up quickly after that, though.
