They do get too warm. I have taken temperature readings on Spring Creek, the lower section, that are 80+ during July and early August, sometimes as early as late June. During one of the few years we have a relatively wet, cool, summer (2009 comes to mind) the lower reaches of Spring Creek will hold stocked trout until fall. Millstone creek gets warm too but I have always been under the impression that it's more of a water quality issue there. I have never witnessed it firsthand but they say when it gets stocked in the spring the trout usually head downstream for the Clarion almost immediately. My success fishing the Clarion in this vicinity would suggest that to be true. I know the major branches of Millstone are literally red and very tannic.
