I do keep a very detailed log, but it's done with the intention of predicting better future outings. I record the date, hours fished, # of fish caught, and water gauge readings and have an elaborate set of spreadsheets to track the data - really gets the wife excited if you know what I mean 😊

Basically I know that when water flows are X for stream Y, I average Z amount of trout per hour. Again the time of year impacts this. More importantly tracking water flows lets me know when the stream is too low to fish or too high and dangerous to fish when I'm planning a trip.

I really enjoy the stat piece of fishing as well - that's the accountant in me. I don't track #'s for glory and bragging, this is fishing after all.
