I am 32 yrs old and have been fishing up north since I was 8 yrs old get a clue fellas and learn to fish there is no reason to be in the heavy deep holes when the river is flowing at 1200 fish the current breaks and the soft water close to the shore learn to use your equipment and a drag free drift and you will have no problem finding the bottom..... I have easily over 50 days a year chasing steel out of the great lakes and the west coast

Probably one of the most humorous posts I have read on this forum. I understand big guy...I knew everything when I was 32 as well. Keep up the fight. Someday you'll look back and be proud you put this kind of talk behind you.

I don't fish the Salmon, so I can't speak to it, but the big rivers in MI with those kinds of flows don't fish as you suggest. The fish hold in the bottom of those big deep holes because the water is crystal clear and it affords them their best protection. It could be that you just don't know what you don't know big guy. Consider it. There are a lot of folks on this forum with far more experience than you describe about your experience and that actually spend even more than 50 days a year on the water fishing for steelhead and salmon each year.

Don't push in looking for a fight. Share your experience and learn a better way to lead. Telling folks their methods are stupid and that they don't have a clue will not garner a positive response, nor is it necessary.
