I would put my money on both of those fish posted being holdover brown trout. The second had translucent amber fins that don't show up until in the stream feeding on forage rather than fish meal. The first is a "weird brown" as was the consensus from the linked thread.

AppArently being a tiger trout is like being pregnant, you cant be a little bit tiger. So if it is the black spotting that has your panties in a bunch it can be attributed to the genes responsible for the black spots.

Now i am looking at this on a. I phone so i may have a diff opine once i get home.

Nevertheless i say holdover for both
