Hello everyone! So I've been fly fishing for a little over a year now I got into it after I came home from Afghanistan and was looking for a outlet. I moved in June to a area just north of Williamsport from Colorado. I have so many questions. I was told there is a fishing season here is this true? In Colorado you can fish all year. Are there any groups of guys that get together and fish all the time? I'd like to get out once a week but I'm a little intimidated venturing out by myself. Thanks guys I really look forward to being part of this community.

Hello Chris and Welcome to the Jungle.

You've encountered and joined a great on-line community of anglers.

Yes, there are specific seasons for different species of fish in Pennsylvania. There are also subsets of regulations for each species, so I advise you to study the booklet that you receive when you purchase your Pennsylvania fishing license.

You may not need the instruction, but if you can make the drive to the Newbie Jam, http://www.paflyfish.com/forums/forum ... wbie-jam---march-16th/11,28687.html , you'll have an opportunity to meet and in the afternoon, fish with a great bunch of people from all over the state. (Grant you, there is a large contingent from southeast PA, but don't hold that against them 😊)

I'm over in NEPA, but you have some great fishing close to you and a few forum members over your way.

Good Luck and welcome!
