k-bob, I agree with you to some extent. It irks me to no end when I'm fishing a wild trout stream on private property and I see garbage, tires, crap like that. I try to clean up trash the best I can, but what am I supposed to do with an air conditioner?

That is very different than what this article is talking about, though, with poser conservationists like Beaver buying up large stretches of land on public waters. There were a few things in the article I never thought about before, particularly the ethics of the DSR. Those ARE state managed fish, paid for by the NY anglers. I never thought about that before and I'm not sure how I feel about it now.
