Small world- I got my start, my very first fly fishing excursions, on Little Mahoning. I was probably 12 or 13. That was a lot of years ago and trust me when I say its still tough and frustrating. But you have to stick with it. It may take a long time. Fishing for tougher fish under more exacting conditions is all part of fly fishing and especially project waters.

As far as specific advice for Little Mahoning, a woolly bugger is just fine. But consider learning to fish wetflies on the downstream swing. This is one of the easiest ways to fish and I know from experience a beginner can catch fish in that stream using this tactic. Look up some of the many threads on here about wet fly fishing. the good news is these are mostly stocked fish, so they are a little easier to catch when they are fresh and haven't been fished over by a million guys.
