

Subject: : Conservation

Topic: : Will the North Pole be ice free this summer?

Re: Will the North Pole be ice free this summer?

Author: : wetnet

Date: : 2008/7/4 10:56:55

URL:

The earth has changed many times before but it is very sad that all of those years we spent warm in our beds and taking a drive for an icecream early on could have set forth the waste that has been occuring years sense that is contributing to the demise of our ice caps.

The only good thing I see out of it is that Americans are becoming creative again. Even the corporate ones. Maybe because it looks good as a public standpoint or I'd like to hope for environmental reasons. There are more green roofs going on buildings, I see more and more hybrids and there are huge windmills on mountain ridges by us. They are looking at the geothermal that can be utilized from the past mining industries. From what I understand the Pa Governors Mansion is heated by this means.

It's not a quick fix but it's nice for the first time to hear people finally conserve. It's too bad it took $5 a gallon gas prices to drive them there.

I'm not a put my head in the sand type of person but I can not watch any more the plight of the polar bears shows. They are just too sad. So maybe that's a yes to the question. If not this year very soon to come.