Talking with the fishermen they are mainly catching rainbows. But the water temperature has been in the high 30s. It has been my experience on the Tully that when the water temp was in the 30s one would catch rainbows most of the time and when the water temp moved up into the 40s you would start catching more browns. At times I would wonder what happened to the browns and then when the temps improved I would start catching them and it was not related to fishing technique.

With last summer being very hot some people were concerned about survival of the browns that were stocked in the Spring. When September came around the browns were still there in very good numbers.
