A simple solution is for the state to value properties with posted land on migratory streams to have a much higher value than those with non posted land - to financially compensate the state for the provision of stocks.

The state can then use those funds to purchase public land elsewhere and stock other streams.

Which may seem unfair to the property owners or clubs - but if the state stopped stocking, within 5 years their properties would be worth half I reckon.

They can't have it both ways IMHO.
