Thats funny, 6 ft shouldn't hurt it.

Here is another tip....

#1 Never, Never Never, strip all your line off a reel to shorten the backing length with a cat in the room.

Another, once I was trying a neighbors rod that he wanted to sell. I took it in my yard (alone) and stripped off a bunch of line and started feeding it through the guides. Didn't see my cat at my feet....When I pulled the tippet through and began casting the line shot out and landed in a lump at the end of the driveway. The cat had chewed it in half about 15 ft in from the leader.

I tied the leader to the line end and spooled up the cut off piece and put it in my pocket. then I took the rod back and told him I would have to think about it.... Hahaha

I ended up buying it but never told him about the cat mishap.
