I agree with Jack, the leader-fly line junction is a great place to focus on when nymphing if not using an indicator. Make sure your nymph is occasionally touching the bottom. You should be able to feel it tick bottom every now and then. Don't expect to feel or even see every take, sometimes you will just sense the take. Never hesitate to raise the rod tip in response to a possible take. You will be surprised how many of them result in a hook up. As you start to hook fish on the subtle takes your confidence level will soar and you will be well on your way. You still will miss a bunch of takes but you will catch a lot of fish as you develop your confidence in nymphing. Good luck!
