This past weekend and today I hit two local lakes for panfish. On Sunday a friend and myself spent most of our time trying to find the fish. Once we found them we caught 20-30 in short order. After enduring some intense rain, today i was able to find the fish faster and caught 40 or 50 in a little over an hour. All the fish were small-medium sized but it was nice to catch mostly crappie. The water is still a little cold (47 today) and it's still early, but the fish are staging up and feeding in preparation for the spawn. I found all of the fish in deep cover. Hopefully some better sized fish will start showing up.
