Yes, you can swing the small ones they'll see em. During a sporadic hatch is a great time, when you see your riser get in position and cast to swing to that fish might take a couple of casts to find it's position but targeting specific rising fish works really well with soft hackles. Before and definitely after a hatch fish those guys they're always on the lookout for drowned and the last of the hatch.

you can fish them through a hatch, but most people can't stand it and switch to a dry. You can also high stick them, you have a nice spot in front of you cast up in the seam and drift it through, My son did that in front of them around to the back of a nice rock and picked some up. Hope this was what you were looking for. Jack
