

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : stonefly dry

Re: stonefly dry

Author: : Fishidiot

Date: : 2013/3/13 8:04:53

URL:

Quote:

IdratherbePhishing wrote:

I was in Harrisburg the other day coming back to Dauphin and the stones were everywhere. I was driving up front street. They were smacking all over my windshield.

In my experience here in the south central.....little early stones are much more prevalent on warm water rivers than smaller trout streams. The densest emergence of little stones I've ever seen was on the Juniata River and the Susky around Harrisburg has some really thick stonefly hatches as well.

When I've been out prospecting for early spring bass and muskies the last few weeks, I have seen them thick on rivers. On trout streams around here I have seen much fewer of them this year. This is typical of what I've seen over the years.