Mike: I cast upstream and keep my line fairly taunt as it comes back down the river. I am left handed and follow the line with the tip until it gets to a certain point where it starts to swing. Once it starts the swing I retrieve it and cast up river again. I do sometimes watch my flyline tip to see if it stops or darts forward. It also depends on current conditions. Slow moving is easier to watch the tip and see the take. I recently was trout fishing in MO and for the most part I used an indicator. I did around 3 hours without the indicator and did get a few trout, but lost several. I felt that I lost those because of the delay in the take and when I felt the hit they were able to spit out the nymph. Also, my reaction time is a little slower during the winter/early spring months because of it being cold.
